PAINT FOR INSIDE OF SILOS

Specialty Prepared Mixtures Are Put Up by Firms Which Build Huge Receptacles.

Some of the firms putting up concrete silos have specially prepared mixtures to use in painting the inside. A wash of pure cement is often used to fill the pores of the silo walls. Prof. J. B. Fitch, head of the dairy department of the Kansas State Agricultural college, states that he prefers to use warm tar or hot paraffine to coat the inside of concrete silos. He says: "If you can keep the tar warm and put it on when thin it will make a good inside coat. The same is true of melted paraffine. I have had good results from using both of these."

EXCELLENT EMERGENCY CROP

Soy Beans When Cut and Cured Properly Compare Favorably With Alfalfa for Stock.

Soy beans make an excellent emergency hay crop when cut and cured properly and the hay compares very favorably with alfalfa hay for sheep and cattle. It is rich in digestible protein, averaging about 12 per cent, while alfalfa averages 11 per cent and timothy 8 per cent. The yields of air-dried hay on the co-operative test fields last year varied from 1,780 to 8,850 pounds per acre.

PRODUCTION OF CATTLE IN WEST

FEEDING PERILOUS VENTURE

According to cost of production investigations conducted by the United States department of agriculture in co-operation with the University of Nebraska in parts of Nebraska during the past two years, the average cost of corn-fed cattle laid down at market was $14.01 per hundredweight for 2,263 head fed in the winter of 1918-19, $13.83 for 8,044 cattle in a survey study during the winter of 1919-20, and an average of $13.89 for an additional 705 cattle upon which detailed cost figures were secured during the same winter. The costs upon some droves were found to vary widely from these average figures, with the major portion going to market the first winter (1918-19) carrying an expense bill of from $13 to $19 a hundredweight, while in 1919-20 the costs of most of the cattle were between $11 and $17. The facts thus far brought out by the investigation would indicate that during the past two years, in the district covered by the survey, cattle feeding was a precarious venture, more likely to be unprofitable than not. There was an average loss per head of $3.17 on the cattle for which records were obtained in 1918-19, and of $10.59 and $14.57 on two groups for which records were obtained in 1919-20.

These figures are the results of the first two years' work of a five-year study of the basic factors of the cost of fattening cattle, which is being conducted in Nebraska by the office of farm management and farm econ-

IN SUBDUED MUES

Color Calendar Tells the Story for UNITY Garments.

"Use in High Fever; Shock and White Continues in Vogue; Browns and Tans Are Liked."

The color calendar tells the story of more subdued hues for unity garments, church and visiting costumes, the latter being allowed brighter touches in cases of motor transportation.

The idea seems to be that since summer has gone and taken the hues of warm-weather, go-as-you-please sentiment, the public streets are not the places for clothes of conspicuous colors.

However, exceptions are allowed, although scarce—and girls in their "teens" may frolic forth in vivid blue, and there's a certain burst orange that is quite correct for the young women to wear, in uniform or in festivity on the street as well as indoors.

The hints and shades for the evening gown are in fascinating pastel and the misty blues in transparent fabrics never was so near pallid reflections from the rainbow.

Black and white, singly and combined, continue in vogue. Blues in high fashion through its gamut of shades, and a new dusky tone evokes a hint of night on the waters. Greys are as plentiful as blackberries in their season, and one shade with a lovely olive drift is the prettiest of them all.

Browns and tans keep right along as stand-bys for all uses. The old-fashioned crushed strawbery, a new tone of cerise, a red with a coppery glint, and a green with an orange suggestion are shown as "most recent."

Violet is in wide vogue, and lilac and lavender are variously introduced.

"The dear old jade green still is abundantly apparent."

Gift Muffs and Furs

Can a horn be square?

Not on The Brunswick. It is rounded, tapering into an oval. This Brunswick Tone Amplifier, or "horn," is built to conform to acoustic principles.

Tone is developed scientifically. The Amplifier is built entirely of wood—especially chosen, seasoned and moulded. It connects directly with the tone arm.

There is NO CAST METAL throat on The Brunswick. So unnatural and metallic noises are absent.

Such advanced ideas as these, together with many others, make the Brunswick Method of Reproduction supreme.

You've never heard the finest in tone if you haven't heard The Brunswick. And proof is easy. Merely come and hear it. Make comparisons.

ice, in co-operation with the University of Nebraska and the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture. Similar studies are being conducted in Iowa, Missouri, Illinois and Indiana, and preliminary reports on the work in these states will be forthcoming shortly.

Feeding Plays Minor Part.

The greater part of the Nebraska cattle covered in the survey work of 1918-19 made their gains at a cost of from 20 to 35 cents per pound, with extremes ranging from 12 to 48 cents, while of the cattle covered the next year the greater part made their gains at from 15 to 35 cents per pound, with an extreme range of from 8 to 53 cents. While economical feeding is shown to be the major factor in the cost of fattening after the steer is bought, the investigation substantiates the fact that feeding usually plays a minor part in determining profit or loss, and that buying right and selling right are more often the controlling factors.

The cattle in question were bought at about the same figures in both years of the investigation. In 1918-19 three of the droves were bought at between $8 and $7, but most of the cattle covered in the study went into the lot at between $8 and $12. Of the 21 droves covered by the detailed cost-accounting method, 11 cost between $10 and $11. The weight of the feeders varied rather widely, averaging about 730 pounds with but few over 1,000 pounds or under 500.

Feed, the most important factor of the cost of fattening the steer after purchase, was found to constitute from 75 to 90 per cent of all the expense involved in handling the steers after being put on feed.

Wide Variation in Cost Factors.

The wide variation in the factors affecting cost was reflected in equally wide variation in the total cost of the finished cattle. During both of the years of the study the cost of the cattle covered in the surveys ranged from about $8 to $22 per hundred fattened, the average for 1918-19 being $14.01, and for 1919-20, $13.83. The droves covered by the cost-accounting method showed a much narrower range, from $10 to $18 with an average of $13.37.

The financial return varied widely, ranging from $50 profit or more per head reported for 40 head in 1918-19, to $50 or more per head loss, reported for 155 head in 1918-19 and for over 200 head in 1919-20. As has been

Stove heat is uneven and unsatisfactory. Stoves take up a lot of space in rooms—always the best rooms in the house. They mean ashes, dust, dirt and smoke all over the house.

Stoves are out of date. You want more than one or two rooms heated in winter. Stoves are unsightly. Why keep them and be ashamed of your home when neighbors call?

The Economical Waterbury goes into your basement; heats your entire home thru a single register. It will outlast many stoves. Costs less than other types of furnaces and burns fuel more economically.

The Waterbury fills your entire home with warm, moist, healthful air. It means better health, more cheerfulness in the home. Can be installed in a few hours time. Why not be proud of your home when neighbors call?

THE WITCH-GIRL

By AGNES G. BROGAN.

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

Forest piloted his car down the hill in the darkness. Near its foot stood the old Dingley mansion, to which the family returned each summer, sojourning there until fall.

The Dingley name was one known in financial circles. Jim Forest was not surprised that the shancellor himself found pleasure in the relaxation of country hills. Forest counted upon the light from the windows of the mansion to show him his way. He was driving, at this late hour, to the isolated home of a client who felt called upon hurriedly to make his will. But as Forest slowly approached, the great house lay in darkness, the family evidently having departed for the city earlier than usual. Well, there was nothing for it but to try the turn to the right, with headlights on, which the lawyer proceeded to do. No sooner had the brilliancy streamed out before him than he drew back astonished.

At the entrance to the mansion, in the silence of this midnight hour, alone and waving toward him desperately, stood a slight girlish figure. He noted her broad black hat, and soft black fur which seemed to frame her face and bring out its wistful beauty.

"Will you please," she called, "give me a lift?"

Forest stopped the car. The girl immediately sprang into it, hugging in her arms a small bag.

"You do not ask my destination," he said. "I am travelling down an unfrequented way."

The girl nodded.

"But you will have to go back to the city," she said.

"I may be detained," he warned her. His passenger settled back with a sigh.

"Then I'll just have to wait for you," she said. "It's my only hope of getting to the city tonight."

"And it is necessary that you return?"

She motioned toward the desolate house.

"One couldn't stay there," she responded.

Forest bent toward her, earnestly searching the sweet, upraised face.

"One might wonder at your being there alone at this hour," he suggested.

"And one might explain," the girl replied, "that coming from the city unexpectedly on the trolley, one was disappointed in finding the family away from home. One's only hope of returning to shelter being dependent upon some generous driver."

"You might," Forest said, "be some witch of the night, bringing me under your spell."

"And you might," she retorted, "be a daring highwayman, intent upon stealing my purse."

He wrapped the rug about the girl when she went into the home of his client, and it was with strange reluctance that he left her. His errand occupying more than an hour he hastened, after its accomplishment, back to his waiting car.

The girl had completely disappeared. A thorough search failed to reveal her presence anywhere. Slowly, ever hopelessly searching, Forest drove his way cityward. But when he reached his apartment sleep was impossible.

Anxiously, eagerly, thought of the witching girl possessed him. Why had she come to him? Where had she gone?

Wearily-eyed, he opened next morning his paper, breakfast untasted before him. In glaring headlines a sentence caught his eye:

"Emerald necklace stolen from Dingley country residence while family spend evening in city."

Jim Forest turned cold. So he had been the dupe to assist in the getaway. Not for a moment, remembering that appealing face, did he blame the girl. She must in some way have been imposed upon by the real culprit. Perhaps she had tried, in lurching his car, to elude her persecutors, only to be discovered during his absence in his client's home.

The heretofore calm heart of James Forest contracted painfully. Uppermost in his conflicting emotions was a determination to protect this little unknown girl. He reached for the telephone and called the house of Dingley.

"As to the necklace? Oh, yes! They were sorry that they had been so hasty in notifying the police. Isobel, their only daughter, being in the city upon a visit, had decided to hurry out to her home to procure the necklace to wear at an evening affair. She had her own key and was surprised at the absence of her family. Awaiting their return until late in the evening, she had at last despaired of it, and sought assistance from a passing autoist, who drove her to a certain house where he was detained. A second chance driver took her in his car, carrying her back to the city. From her friend's home she called her mother on the phone, telling of her hapless evening's errand, this information coming too late to prevent the papers' startling publication."

"Where," interrupted Forest, eagerly, "may I find Miss Dingley?"

So it happened, in the morning sunshine, that two drove together down a hilly road.

"You were not a highwayman," Miss Dingley conceded, "or you would have captured the necklace in my bag."

"You were a witch girl," Forest insisted, with serious eyes.

Christmas Toys the Boys Can Make

By A. NEELY HALL.

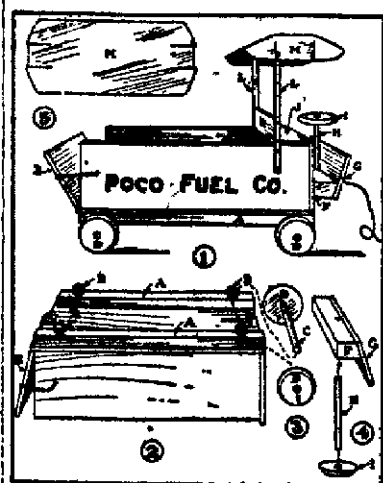

(Copyright by A. Neely Hall.)

When painted in bright colors, the toys shown in the illustrations will be as pleasing to those young relatives whom you wish to remember on Christmas, as any similar toys in stores.

The auto truck shown in Fig. 1 has a cigar-box body 10 inches wide, 8 inches long and 2 inches deep. Cut wooden strips A (Fig. 2) 1 inch wide and 1 inch thick, by the length of the box, and nail them to the box bottom close to the sides. Screw screweye axles B into these strips. The screweyes should be $\frac{3}{4}$ inch in diameter, because the wheel axles C (Fig. 3) must be of this diameter to fit the holes of the spool wheels D. The wheels are spool ends.

Remove the rear end of the box and hinge it to the box bottom (E, Fig. 2), for an end gate.

Fig. 4 shows a detail of front platform, F, dashboard G, steering-post H, and steering-wheel I—a spoolend. Fasten these pieces as indicated. Fit seat J across the box top, and seat back K to its edge. Nail canopy supports L to the seat back and box sides, and tack the canopy M to the supports near the top.

The clown turner (Fig. 6) is made to perform upon his turning-pole by squeezing the lower end of the uprights. The squeezing causes a pair of threads F (Fig. 11) to untwist then twist, and the untwisting and twisting makes the clown turn.

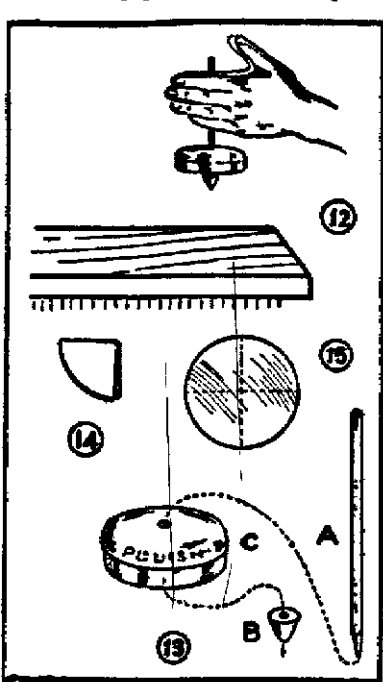

Fig. 7 shows dimensions for uprights A and connecting block B. Fasten B between strips A as shown.

Patterns for the clown are shown in Figs. 8, 9 and 10. Cut the body members out of cigar-box wood, punch holes where indicated, and with pieces of hairpins or other small wire, pivot the arms and legs to the body. Pierce a small hole through each hand, and whittle the ends of a match to fit in the holes. The match (E, Fig. 7) forms the turning-pole. With a coarse needle pierce a pair of holes through the arms at the wrists, and another pair through uprights A near the top. Run heavy linen threads through the holes in the wrists, and twist their ends (F, Fig. 11), then run the ends through the holes in uprights A, and tie. The threads must be twisted when the clown hangs down (Fig. 11), untwisted when he has swung up over the pole.

The top in Fig. 12 requires little description. A pencil with a blunt point (A, Fig. 13) pushed through a spool whittled cone-shaped (B), forms the spinning point, and a shoe-polish can (C), pierced to push over the pencil end and rest upon the spool end, completes the top.

The top is spun by twirling the pencil between the palms in one direction, then the other alternately (Fig. 12).

MOTHER HEN.

"Do Not Stop."

The rooster, was trying to say more and boast harder than Mr. Rooster so that there was a great deal of noise.

"What is Granddaddy saying?" asked the little chicks.

"Oh, dear," said Mother Hen. "They both start that sort of thing every year. They say that they wish everyone to pay attention to their crowing and not to pay any attention to motor horns."

"They've both been very jealous of motor horns for a long time. They say that years and years ago no one noticed motor horns, but that folks listened to them. And now motor horns even toot to get roosters out of the way. And they don't like it. They're very jealous. I think it will be nice when they get more and more air ships for then they won't bother us to get out of the way."

"We're not going to live on the clouds for them to rush out of their way as they would doubtless like us to do—for I suppose they're like flying motor cars after a fashion."

"But while Mr. Rooster and Red Top and the other roosters are very jealous of motor horns you take your old mother's advice and don't pay any attention to anything but a motor horn when you hear one and get out of the way."

"It's not in the least fair that folks should hurry us out of the good old country roads, but they do and the best thing is to get out of the way as I've said."

"Try to go in the shortest directions. Hens are very apt to rush one way and then the other. We're not very bright and those great dust-stirring things do frighten us the way they go—oh, they go so fast."

"But do not stop and hear your grandfather and great uncles boasting when you hear a motor horn. Run to safety and away from the road. And also keep clear of the ditches for some people can't drive those motors as well as they should and they don't seem to think that hens have even rights of the ditches. So, remember, your mother's warning."

"We will, peep, peep, we will," said the little chicks, as they stood about their mother.

"And now," said Mother Hen, "I will take you for a nice walk and will show you the beauties of the barnyard. The most beautiful part is here," said Mother Hen, pointing to one part, "where the farmer brings us the food."

"And all along here it is delightful for much of the seed often drops. Further down there is a nice part you see where there are good worms and sometimes the dear Mr. Roosters help us and get some for us. If you're polite, nice, chicks they may get you some, too."

"The chicks looked about them. 'Over there,' said Mother Hen, 'are some ducklings going down to a brook at the end of the farm.'

"I don't want you to become too friendly with those ducklings for they aren't the sort of playmates Mother Hen cares to have you go with."

"They are much too fond of water and of getting into puddles and of wading. No, Mother Hen doesn't want her nice little ones to have too much to do with them."

"Bow to them politely, but do not be intimate with them. By that I mean do not be chummy with them."

"And in that pen there are some pigs. They aren't good companions for you. They aren't suitable as the playmates of little chicks. But get along with all the creatures."

"Only always make your best friends among the chicks and of your old Mother Hen," she added. And the little chicks peeped and they all said they would do as she said, for they wanted her to protect them—they felt so young and so new."

Erstwhile Estelle

By T. B. ALDERSON

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

Two girls sat in a hotel at Bayville regarding one another with seriousness. More than once the elder of the two, Rhoda Willis, broke out into sobbing. Her sympathizing friend, Estelle Rawdon, spoke to console her. "I wired you to meet me here on my way to Brocton," spoke the former suddenly, "because I felt so heartbroken and longed to find some one to whom I could tell my troubles."

"And will you marry this Wendell Baird if he asks you?"

"Is it not my duty—did I not so promise my dying mother? If it is a terrible sacrifice, it is a sacred one."

"And what of Vincent Searles?"

"I dare not see him, but I must convey the story of our broken lives to him in some way. His sister will understand and pity. She lives across country some fifty miles. I have telephoned Mr. Oliver Baird that I shall rest over here for a few days. In the meantime I will see Miss Searles. You will stay here in my place. I may be gone two days."

"Suppose the elder Mr. Baird, or his son, Wendell, should come down here to view the bride expectant?" suggested Estelle, but Rhoda passed the query off gravely, being in no mood to jest.

Estelle proceeded to enact the role of her friend. The ladies' parlor, a stroll among the brilliant stores, a street view from the windows of her room—full appreciation of those entities was clouded only when Estelle reflected upon the forlorn situation of Rhoda.

They had corresponded regularly, but had not met for over a year when Rhoda sent for her at Bayville. It was to recite a woe-filled tale. A month previous the mother of Rhoda had died. In her last moments she had exacted a solemn pledge from Rhoda to wed Wendell Baird if he sought her as his wife.

"Oliver Baird was your father's closest friend," she told Rhoda. "It was our thought that if you were ever left alone, Mr. Baird should be your guardian, hoping that you might find as a husband his son."

Then there had come a letter from Oliver Baird. It was all arranged that Rhoda was to become his ward. Rhoda had imparted to Estelle the fact that she was engaged to one Vincent Searles. She had given her promise to her mother, fearing the consequences on the falling invalid if she told that it could not be, that she was pledged to another.

As Estelle entered the dining room of the hotel that evening she tripped over a rug askew and was fairly rescued from a fall by a handsome, alert young man, who received her thanks with apparent pleasure. He bowed as he passed her in the hotel parlor the next day, and Estelle remembered and recalled his face as she went up to her room a little later. As she reached its door she uttered a sharp scream. It was burst open and a stranger tried to pass her, bearing in his hand her gold watch bag.

As if by magic there sprang in front of the room thief the young man of the dining room episode. He wrested the plunder from the marauder, but the latter made good his escape.

"I seem to have a protector whenever I get into trouble," said Estelle, and to regain her composure returned to the parlor, the young man accompanying her. There was an hour of enjoyable converse, during which Estelle learned that he was Mr. Paul Harris.

There seemed to be a bond of accepted confidence, liking and companionship established between them after that. The third day passed and Rhoda did not return. A telegram arrived the next morning, however, from Miss Searles. It informed Estelle that Rhoda was ill and asked her to come on to Alton.

Estelle was loath to acknowledge to herself that she would regret losing the company of this magnetic and attentive Paul Harris. When she told him that she was called to a distance he looked disappointed.

"Miss Willis," he said, "circumstances have precipitated a climax that will force me to make an embarrassing admission. Paul Harris is not my name. I am in reality Wendell Baird, and I came here in another guise at the request of my father to view the person he wished me to marry, if I felt I could love her. I can and will, Miss Willis."

"Confession is good for the soul," observed Estelle. "I am not Miss Willis, and to clear away complications, I had better tell you all," and she did. "When you meet Miss Willis," she continued, when he interrupted her.

"After having so rudely told you that I love you," said Baird, "why should I see her at all? Do you not believe that Miss Willis will get well very rapidly when she hears that she does not have to give up the man she already loves?"

It was a queer love making, but it was sincere, and then there Estelle spoke the word that settled the happiness of four earnest souls involved.

A WOMAN IN THE CABINET

The report that President-elect Harding is likely to appoint a woman to sit in his cabinet, at the head of the newly constituted department of education, will be a shock to that element that always held that women should stay at home and bake bread and mind the children.

But the good politician recognizes women now have at least 18,000,000 votes. Their point of view is not the same as that of men. They have somewhat different ideals. A public man who does not make an effort to conform to those ideals so far as he can, is going to run up against a big handicap.

The bulk of the education work in this country is being performed by women. A woman secretary of education would know the soul of American schools quite as well as any man. Also she could throw light on the reactions of the woman vote to the methods of man made politics.

THERE ARE LARGER CLAIMS

The New York Herald is quoted as calling attention to "the Democratic equity" in the result of the presidential election, or the moral right to consideration from the Republicans established by "the large number of Democratic votes cast for Harding." Along the same line the Spokesman-Review, of Spokane, Wash., says that Harding's plurality of 6,000,000 "represents hundreds of thousands of voters who had been Democrats up to 1920," and asks what will be "the attitude of the leaders of the Republican party toward this great host." Answering its own question, the Spokesman-Review says that "able and upright representatives of this big new element in the party should be invited to take responsible positions under President Harding's administration," thus having the opportunity to "help work out the difficult problems before the nation."

If this suggestion from within their own party is unwelcome to the Republican leaders, it will be easy for them to object that the votes of Democrats were not needed and that those of the unhyphenated variety were probably not as many as claimed. Mr. Harding's plurality of 6,000,000 has been accounted for in other ways. George Sylvester Viereck, editor of a weekly recently called The Fatherland, is quoted as saying that persons of German birth and descent alone gave Mr. Harding 6,000,000 votes in the interests of better terms for a separate peace with Germany. Then there were hosts of Irish, Italian, and representatives of other foreign groups who are said to have voted for him in mother-country interests. Unquestionably the claims for recognition on the part of foreign-group voters, if based on numbers alone, are far superior to those of American-born Democrats.

THE JEW GOVERNOR OF A MORMON STATE

A Philadelphia reporter in writing a personal sketch of the thirty some odd governors attending the governors' convention at Harrisburg, describes most intimately Governor Bamberger, of Utah. His side reference to Mormonism is even more interesting. But here it is in his own words:

"Take Governor Simon Bamberger, gentleman among gentlemen, he's just one of the nicest and kindest and most agreeable old fellows that ever was. He doesn't mind being called an old fellow at all, because, as a matter of fact, he says he knows he's getting old, and that's the reason he is getting out of politics while the getting out is good."

Tells Story of Life

"Sitting in the lobby of the Penn-Harris in Harrisburg the afternoon before the conference opened, Governor Bamberger related the story of his career. 'Yes, I'm a Jew,' he said, 'and I'm proud of it. More than that, I am the only man who ever sat in the governor's chair of the state of Utah who was not a member of the Mormon church. And I'm a Democrat, too; but I think so much of the Republicans that I brought my Republican successor along with me, Governor-elect Charles B. Mabey.'

"And, speaking of Mormons, Governor Bamberger's remarks at the Bellevue banquet Friday are of more than passing interest to people of the east who may have some wrong ideas of people of the west. 'I want everybody to know,' he said, 'that the Mormons are as loyal as any other people on the face of the earth. Maybey is a Mormon missionary and he's fine fellow. And, as for polygamy, it is wiped off the map forever.'

"But, back to Governor Bamberger's career: It is an unusual one. The other governors made him chairman at the first session of the conference, but on the second day he was among the missing. Somebody suggested that Lew Sadler had kept him all night to show him his celars, but no, nothing like that. Governor Bamberger was off at Gettysburg, viewing the scene of the great battle that he had so often read about.

"When I came to America,' he said, 'I was 14 and I couldn't speak a word of English. My father was imprisoned and persecuted at home for advocating just such things as the Union fought for at Gettysburg, and I made up my mind I was going to that spot the first chance I had. Now I've had it, and the next place I'm going to see is Valley Forge.'

'There's an American for you. And he come's all the way from Utah.

MEDICAL MEN MEET TO FACE A BIG PROBLEM

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Physicians and noted men from all parts of the United States met here yesterday for a week's conference to plan a nationwide campaign against the "Great Red Plague," a phrase invented by the United States Public Health Service to stand for two special diseases.

The conference was called by Dr. Hugh Cummings, surgeon general of the United States.

Practically certain cures now have been discovered and proved by medical science for the two most common social diseases, according to officials of the health service. To be effective in combating the diseases in the United States, however, the cures must be understood by the public, officials point out. How to get the facts across convincingly will be one of the problems to be discussed by the conference.

General Pershing is one of many noted men who have accepted invitations to attend. Pershing is expected to describe the methods used by the military authorities to protect the A. E. F. against disease in France and later in Germany.

Famous Writers' Beginnings.

Jack London, before he reached the goal of one of the most popular writers of the day, combined the efforts of half a dozen men in various kinds of work ranging all the way from a tramp to a sea captain. Mary Roberts Rinehart was to be a nurse and gained her intimate knowledge of hospital work in the Pittsburgh School for Nurses. Louise Closser Hale had histrionic aspirations, and her familiarity with stage life is due to the fact that she was an actress before she became a writer.

FIERY, ITCHY SKIN QUICKLY SOOTHED WITH SULPHUR

Mentho-Sulphur, a pleasant cream, will soothe and heal skin that is irritated or broken out with eczema; that is covered with ugly rash or pimples, or is rough or dry. Nothing subdues fiery skin eruptions so quickly, says a noted skin specialist.

The moment this sulphur preparation is applied the itching stops and after two or three applications, the eczema is gone and the skin is delightfully clear and smooth. Sulphur is so precious as a skin remedy because it destroys the parasites that cause the burning, itching or disfigurement. Mentho-Sulphur always heals eczema right up.

A small jar of Mentho-Sulphur may be had at any good drug store.

A Trick of Fate

By CECILLE LANGDON

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

Behind Egbert Royce was a joyous boyhood, a pleasant college career and a clear record. Before him was a glowing prospect of ambition. He had worked hard as a law student, had been admitted to the bar and had taken a month's vacation at the insistent command of his uncle.

"Forget everything and have a good time," said that indulgent individual. "I have placed a liberal account at your banker's. You begin active service with Chapman, Burt & Royce as a full partner, and I expect to take pleasure in watching and nurturing your professional career. There can't be much that you want that you can't have."

What Egbert wished for at heart was congenial companionship and close human sympathy. He had been an orphan from the age of ten and had lived with his bachelor uncle in a massive but cheerless home. Impulsive, warm-hearted, now that his future was practically solved he longed to unite with it all the various social amenities, ready and eager to make friends, and his restless and sincere frame of mind made him an easy captive to love if it came along.

Merton, whether he sojournd, was an ideal spot for the enjoyment of nature. He took long tramps every day, dining at some old-time cross-roads hostelry, or carried a liberal lunch, which keen exercise caused him to enjoy with rare zest. It was his fifth day of exile from city life and its turbulence that Egbert sought the grateful shade of a thick tree near a pretty brook, placed his package of lunch on the ground and gave himself over to a slumberous ease. He closed his eyes to open them as a swishing sound struck his ear.

"Here! you audacious robber!" ejaculated Egbert, arising to his feet, but too late to avoid speedy action on the part of an intruder.

A small, brisk dog had come into view bearing in his teeth a dark object, which he dropped to take a sniff at the package of lunch. Made aware of the contents of this, the animal straightway transferred it to his jaws and scuttled away in a flash.

Egbert called, whistled, ran after the canine thief, but the latter was speedily out of sight. More slowly Egbert traversed the immediate vicinity without result, to return to the thicket and regard with considerable surprise the object the dog had dropped.

It was a shoe, a lady's shoe, but so dainty and diminutive that Egbert declared that its owner must be a miracle of grace and form. It was nearly new, was of expensive fabric, and built along the lines of fashion.

"I declare!" ruminated Egbert. "Where did the dog ever come from and where can he be the owner of this marvel of shoemaking excellence?" and he began to mentally construct a fairy creature to fit the shoe. She was worth the pains of looking for, he decided, and a sensation born of romance urged him to traverse quite a distance in search of the lady in question, but vainly.

He returned to his hotel late in the day, the shoe in his pocket. He placed it on the stand at the side of his bed and smiled at the vast romance his mind conjured as he went to sleep. It was several hours later that he awoke, gasping, half blinded, so utterly helpless that he found himself unable to struggle to an upright position.

Egbert experienced a suffocating sensation that warned him of serious peril. Then a conception of the cause of the same aroused him to desperate action. The room was full of escaping gas, coming from a leak in the supply pipe or from the jet, which had in some way been turned on after the light was extinguished.

He groped and tried to cry out. His hand met the top of the stand. It rested upon the shoe. He grasped it and then with all the strength he was capable of he hurled it at the broad transom over the top of the door of the room.

Crash! There was a slight relief of the poisonous pressure. For a moment sensibility deserted Egbert, but he was reawakened as a servant in the corridor was showered with the falling glass, burst open the door and Egbert was saved.

"And the shoe?" asked me," he reflected the next morning, and before noon he was retraversing his route of the day before. A certain belief in fate, an inexplicable desire to find the owner of the shoe possessed him.

Traversing the sloping shore of the brook Egbert spurred up as in the sand he detected the impress of a dog's feet. Next his glance fell upon thirty heel marks of a shoe, and then of one of coarser mold.

"Not mates!" breathed Egbert. "It must be she!" and turning past a grove he came in sight of the canine robber and at his side a winsome-faced, graceful-looking young lady.

"It was one of Tosco's mischievous tricks carrying away the shoe," Lettie Paxton explained. "I have had to go with him until father could send for a new pair," and she looked so bewitchingly sympathetic and glad when told of how his life had been saved, that he secretly knew that before he began his career in the courts of law he would serve a willing apprenticeship in the courts of love.

IN BRONCHO-BUSTING GAME

Legionnaires Prove to Be Pastmasters of the Art at Casper (Wyo.) Stampede.

The Wild West of broncho-busting, steer-roping and reckless riding, burst into new life at the American Legion stampede held at Casper, Wyo., when untamed horses and longhorns were brought into town for the Legionnaires.

Jack Brown, on "Coyote," Casper, Wyo., American Legion Stampede.

to motor in an exhibition rivaling the famous Cheyenne frontier days.

Old timers in the cattle country, who were inclined to scoff at the pretentiousness of the projected stampede, remained to cheer themselves hoarse when the opening day came, and the Legionnaires with bows and quivers proved themselves the masters of the "bull," "bronchos" and subdued rambles. Stagers in bulldogging contests.

The stampede was a success financially, and will become an annual event with the Legionnaires of Casper.

THE FRATERNITY OF PEOPLES

Goal to Which Veterans of World War Are Striving, Paris Post Adjutant Declares

The "fraternity of peoples" was depicted as the goal toward which veterans of the World War in all countries are striving, in an address by Arthur W. Kipling, adjutant of Paris post, American Legion, to the annual convention of the "Union Nationale des Combattants" at the Trocadero.

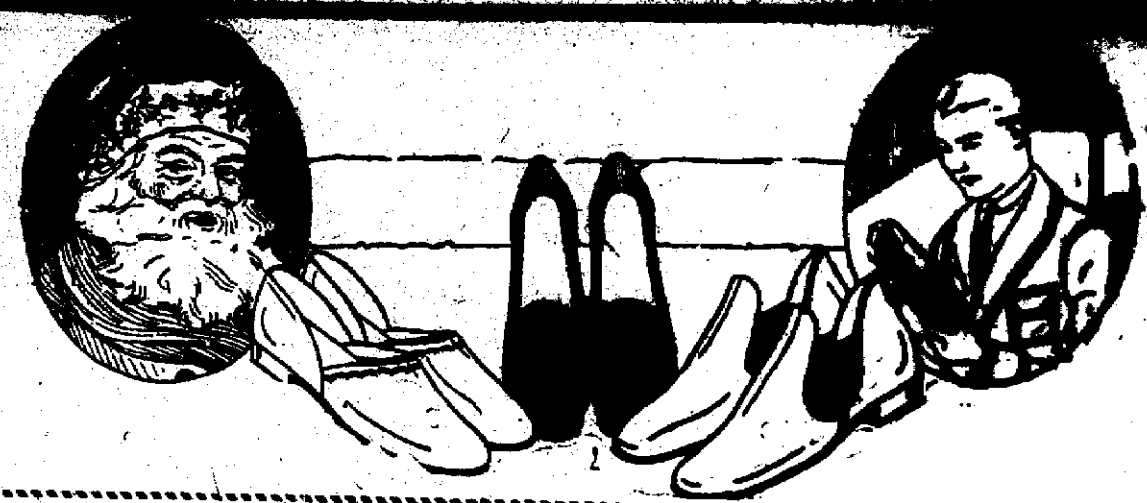

Mr. Kipling greeted the French veterans in the name of the veterans of America, and explained that he had been designated to represent the American ex-service men at the gathering of their comrades.

"The effort which you are making today, my French comrades," he said, "is identical with the effort which the American Legion is making in the United States. We all seek the recovery of the race, by the young men of the race, for humanity's sake, and so that our efforts may end in the fraternity of peoples, it depends upon us, former combatants, in the great war, to understand each other and if necessary to speak frankly while looking each other squarely in the eye."

Andre Lefevre, French minister of war, presided at the convention and addresses were also delivered by Gen. Leon Durand and Charles Bertrand, a deputy. Captain Torse, a blinded veteran, spoke for Britain's former soldiers and officers of the Belgian and Italian armies carried messages from ex-service men of their countries.

Breathe Deeply. Recall all of the best singers you know and you will find that the majority of them are usually well developed in the throat and chest. Singing is a splendid exercise when considered in connection with the vital necessity for perfect health, and even if one can not sing, at least the effort, if rewarded with good health, is not to be despised for its beneficial effects.

Shoes That Hurt. When you buy a new pair of shoes and they hurt your feet, place them in warm water (not hot); let them remain five minutes, take them out, shake out the water, put them on your feet, go about your domestic work, don't sit down until your shoes are dry. You will find that you have as comfortable a pair of shoes as you ever had on your feet. Try it and see if my story is not true.

TRINITY METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society meets this evening at the church at 7:30 o'clock. Some special music will give added interest to this service.

The Ladies Aid Society have their business meeting Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock followed by the usual social hour and luncheon, and also a feed sale.

The church choir under the direction of Mrs. Della Anderson Gallaher have the preparations for Christmas well under way and the indications are that the congregation will have the chance to enjoy some exceptionally fine music during the Christmas season.

Of Course They Would.

Election time was drawing near and an enthusiastic politician was addressing his constituents in a frenzied speech. Not a few of his assertions reduced to cold thought, were diametrically opposed to one another, but each proposal was received with applause. A judge turned to his companion and said: "This reminds me of the Irish leader who was cheering his men on to battle. 'Min,' said he, 'ye are on the verge of battle, an' I want to ask ye before ye start, will ye fight or will ye run?' 'We will, we will, we will,' they replied. 'Which way ye do?' says he. 'We will not,' says they. 'Aha, thank ye, me min,' says he. 'I thought ye would.'"

For several years past and gone, and just before the holidays arrived there had been considerable agitation relative to having a Community Christmas tree in Curwensville. This season is no exception, and already a movement is afoot to have one this year. Whether it will all end in talk remains to be seen. A community Christmas tree, placed on the bank corner, and lighted up with colored lights during Christmas eve, would be a grand treat for the little ones, and would teach them that there is something more to the full meaning of the word Christmas, than merely a syllable word formed by joining together a few letters. Other towns have had community Christmas trees, and they have proven a grand success in every respect. It would give the people a chance to give presents to the poor of the community as well as to their friends, without the formality of sending their packages through the mails or by messenger. Could there be anything prettier than a handsome tree, stationed at a central point, handsomely trimmed with flowers and gifts, and lighted by all colors found in a rainbow? We imagine not. Then think of the pleasure and happiness that would be derived by those who would be a recipient of a remembrance that came to them unexpectedly and from an unknown friend. Would not the kiddies shout in gladness if they were given an opportunity to dance around a tree, knowing full well that hidden among its green branches, there was something coming to them? Let Curwensville folks join hand in hand and have a genuine Community Christmas tree.

Levoy Williams came up from Clearfield where he is working in a brick yard, and spent Sunday with home folks.

DuBois merchants are engaged at repairing several "donkey" engines for the Crescent Refractories company. It is stated that the yard will only run three days a week from now on and until further notice and some of the men employed at the plant claim that the suspension will last only until the first of the next year.

Conwell Nfer is visiting his uncle John Pifer on Thompson street. He is a son of Dick Pifer, the family removing from Curwensville ten years ago and locating in Kakabeka Falls, Ontario, Canada. He is on his way to Hood Valley, Oregon, the family preceding home, going via an other route.

Relatives of Mr. George Strator who removed from Curwensville to Blue Ball early in the spring months were notified Saturday that she is seriously ill, suffering from an attack of diphtheria. Her friends in this place are anxiously awaiting encouraging news from her home that she will recover her usual health fully, and that no serious defects will remain to cause her physical trouble hereafter.

Bethesda lodge No. 821, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, held an unusually busy and interesting session in their hall on Saturday evening last. Besides transacting a good sized budget of important lodge business, a class of six candidates were initiated and instructed in the mysteries of the initiatory degree of the order. Three or more new applications for membership will be taken up and acted upon at the session to be held next Saturday evening.

About a dozen Curwensville men are now engaged in grading for a new tram road, leading from the John Garrison farm in Pike township, to a point near the Pee Wee nest. The main object of this road is to haul the coal to be taken out under the Garrison farm and other lands in close proximity to it, to a point along the N. Y. C. railroad and reload it to regular cars for shipment to market. The rate paid on this work is 60 cents per hour.

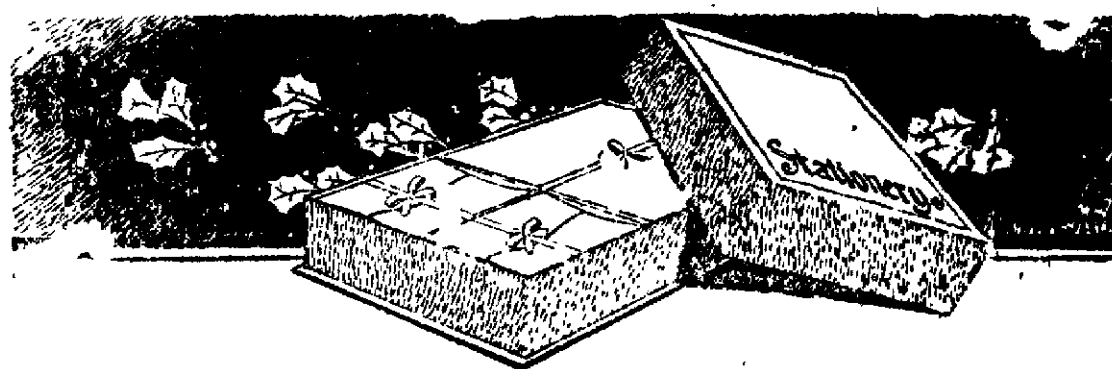

Mrs. Detrich, of the Central Hotel has had the dining room of that hostelry closed to the public for some months. After due deliberation she decided to open its doors once more and give meals as she did before she decided to cease feeding travelers and others. The Central hotel, for years, was known far and wide for the bountiful food served at its tables.

ROSS & WOODS

BRINGS HIS KITTY HOME

Ray J. Klinger, of Ogden avenue, member of the Schot camp, came to town this morning with the head and hide of the catamount which he killed on the first day of the hunting season. The cat came out to him while he was on the watch on the Penfield Pike and the first shot fired put the cat down but not out. Although the shot was well placed the cat proved worthy of the old saying about the cat having nine lives and Mr. Klinger followed it for over two hundred yards before he came upon it again. It weighed sixty pounds.

GIVE HENRY THE BARLOW

Henry Rhine is after the prize for catching deer and deer for the 1920 season. Not content with getting one deer this season he rambled out the Penfield Pike this morning for a few hours hunt. Being a regular hunter he of course got hungry about the time he smelled the timber and sat down alongside the pike for a lunch. While munching a sandwich a fine spike buck pumped out on the road ahead of him—and to Henry that meant a dead buck. One well placed shot and the buck was thrown across the radiator of the wagon Ford made famous.

Mrs. Detrich, realizing that as both hotels had ceased to furnish meals, was an injury to the town's welfare and prosperity, causing the salesmen and others who visited the village to depend upon the restaurant for meals, decided to re-open her dining room and feed whomsoever came that way, which she did on Monday and will continue to do so, for a time at least.

BETTY'S VACATION

By MARION C. LEESAM.

Betty Saunders listened anxiously while two of the other stenographers of the little firm of Brown & Co. talked eagerly about vacations. One of the girls was going up on the cool Maine shore, while the other was anticipating spending her two weeks on the edge of a beautiful lake at the foot of the New Hampshire hills.

Betty's eyes filled with tears as she tried hard to concentrate her mind on the transcribing of her notes and, as her fingers skimmed lightly over the typewriter keys, she pictured the kind of a vacation she was going to have. Her mother was an invalid. It had been a hard pinch for Mrs. Saunders to let Betty go through school, but she was now reaping the benefit, as Betty, having studied hard, now held the position of private secretary.

Being young and pretty, good times appealed to Betty, but many an invitation had been turned down with regret, as she disliked leaving her mother alone.

Her thoughts were suddenly interrupted by the sound of a buzzer summoning her to the president's office. She hastily wiped away all trace of tears and, taking her notebook, walked across the hall into the private office. Seated beside Mr. Brown was a tall, fair-haired chap in khaki. He arose as Betty entered and Mr. Brown introduced him.

"Miss Saunders, this is my son who has just returned, having spent eighteen months in France. Instead of going back for his last year at college he is going to start in here and learn the business. You will take his dictation now, and any inside lines on the work that you know about I will trust you to make clear to him."

Jack Brown, Jr., was so interested in watching Betty he hardly heard what his father was saying, and as she left the room he seemed a little more interested in the idea of starting his business career than he had a few hours before.

As the days passed on Betty spent much more of her time in the office of the young Mr. Brown, and realized more and more how Mr. Brown, Sr., was relying on his son and by degrees relieving himself of some of the burdens he had been bearing alone. The time passed very quickly to Betty and before she knew it the time came when she was to close up her typewriter and leave for two long weeks. Usually Betty had a half-holiday on Saturday, but today she worked overtime in order to get things ready for the girl who was to substitute for her. Jack Brown, although he didn't show it, was quite annoyed at the thought of her being away, from a business standpoint, and then he couldn't quite picture anyone else sitting in her place.

It was a very warm, sultry afternoon and as Betty worked she felt happy at the thought of a vacation. Even though she couldn't go away, she could at least rest in the shady hammock at home, away from the rush and turmoil of the city.

While she was getting ready to go home Mr. Brown, Jr., came over and wished her a pleasant vacation.

"Where are you going, Miss Saunders, seashore or country?"

Betty flushed and quietly told him of her mother's illness and how she was unable to go away. She was too proud to let him know she couldn't afford to take her mother away.

"That's a shame," said Jack inwardly kicking himself for being the cause of her embarrassment. "You work so hard here in the office you deserve a little recreation."

After Betty had gone, he thought over the situation and his face lightened as he thought of a plan. At 7:30 that evening the telephone at Betty's house tinkled and Mr. Jack Brown was on the line.

"I thought you might like to take a little motor ride, it's such a warm night, that is if you have no other engagement."

Betty's heart jumped. "I would just love to, but—"

"And, of course, your mother will accompany us. I think a ride along the seashore would do her good."

That settled it for Betty, and Mrs. Saunders was just as pleased, for a change for her away from the house was a great treat.

Many happy times followed during the two weeks. There were picnic parties and drives through the cool green country or other rides along the shore, and when Betty returned to the office she was a very happy girl.

The following spring came with all its brightness and soon vacation time was again being discussed at Brown & Co.'s. Betty listened to the chatter of the girls and thought of all the changes that happened in one year.

That night she and Jack took a long ride. When he stopped his car at Betty's house, on their return, he tenderly took her hand.

"Well, little girl, where are you going on your vacation this year?"

"I don't know," said Betty, her thoughts far away.

"I do," said Jack. "You're going to marry me and we're going on a month's honeymoon." He slipped a sparkling ring on Betty's finger and then kissed it reverently.

"How is that for a vacation?"

Betty was too happy to answer, but Mr. Brown, Sr., did a good deal of digging while his son was away that month, and quietly mourned the loss of his secretary forever.

The Final Melody.

It is not so much by what we attain in this life that we are to be made happy, as by the calving hope of what we shall reach in the world to come. While a man is stringing a harp, he tries the strings, not for music, but for construction. When it is finished it shall be played for melodies. God is fashioning the human heart for future joy. He only sounds a string here and there to see how far his work has progressed.—H. W. Beecher.

The Diamond Market Has Broken!

The Most Fortunate Break Of All the Adjusting Markets

This break in the diamond markets could not have come at a more opportune time--just before Xmas. It brings these most precious offerings within the reach of many folks who thought they have to forego giving diamonds for Christmas.

The Reasons For the Break

Diamonds are handled largely by diamond brokers. The tightening money market with its consequent withdrawal of cheap money has made many of these brokers sell their stocks at a sacrifice--in some cases the bankruptcy courts have had to be used to clear away hoarded stocks.

Most of the diamonds come to this country from Holland. The basis of exchange is the "Kronen" The Kronen has been carried at a higher rate of exchange but adjustments in the value of the American dollar in Holland money markets now gives the American Dollar a higher value. Hence the "Kronen" buys more.

Our Present Stock of Diamonds Offered You At Great Sacrifice

We have some beautiful stones mounted in gold and platinum rings. The sizes vary and with the varying sizes comes the varying prices. However we will sacrifice our present stocks at a time when we can make your Christmas diamond giving a matter of much less money.

Buy now while we have the old stocks on hand. The adjustments will save you a lot of money on your Christmas buying.

OPPORTUNE TIME TO DESTROY COCKLEBUR

Weeds Occasionally Kill Swine and Young Cattle.

Noxious Plants Do Not Grow Very Luxuriantly in Grain Fields Until After Removal of Crop--Clover
Is Useful

Aside from its general unsightliness on the farm and the severe damage done to crops, such as corn, cocklebur also occasionally kill swine and young cattle. According to Department Circular 100, issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, cockleburs do not grow very luxuriantly in grain fields until after the removal of the crop; the cocklebur should then be plowed under before they mature seeds. In the North early fall plowing before the seed ripens is always good practice for controlling this weed.

The weed may be destroyed by the use of any good shading crop, such as buckwheat, soy beans or cowpeas. Clover is particularly useful in subduing cocklebur. Close grazing with sheep, especially in grain stubble, is a very useful practice. In heavily infested areas mowing and burning have been successfully practiced. Plants in waste places should be removed by mowing before burs are formed, or, better still, by hand removal following rain, when the ground is soft. The spud, mattock and hoe are all useful instruments in eradicating cocklebur. The removal of cocklebur from waste areas is of special importance, because the burs from a single plant may spread to all parts of the farm, since they adhere readily to the clothing of passers-by or to the coats of animals.

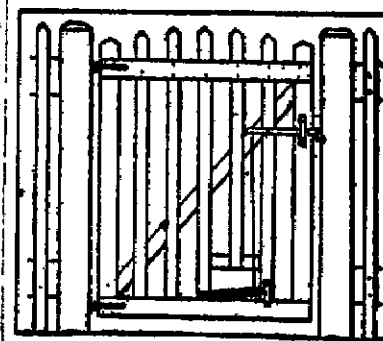

If the farm is equipped with spraying machinery it is practicable to destroy cockleburs entirely by spraying early in the spring with a solution of iron sulphate used at the rate of two pounds of the chemical to a gallon of water.

CONVENIENT GATE FOR FARM

Easily Opened by Use of Foot From Either Side--Handy When Carrying a Big Load.

It is often a difficult matter to open an ordinary gate when one is carrying a load, such as two pails of milk. Much time has been lost in putting down the load, opening the gate, lifting the load, going through and putting down the load, again closing the gate and then lifting the load before going forward. With the device shown in the drawing, the load need not be dropped at all.

The latch is made to catch from either direction so the gate swings freely, both forward and backward. Its opposite end is attached by a stout wire to a tread just above the lower cross-piece of the gate frame. The latch itself should be heavy enough to offset the weight of the wire and the tread. Preferably it should be of iron and the tread of wood, so that it will always drop into place. This will always keep the tread up and in position ready for being stepped upon. All that is necessary to open such a gate is to place the foot lightly upon the tread, give a slight push forward and walk through. The gate, if properly hung, will close of its own weight.

VALUE OF SHREDDED STOVER

Much Depends on Weather to Which Corn Fodder Was Exposed
While in the Shock.

The feeding value of shredded corn stover varies greatly, depending on the weather to which the corn fodder was exposed while in the shock. On the average it probably takes a ton of shredded corn stover to equal in feeding value two-thirds of a ton of ordinary mixed hay.

Desire for Urban Life Diminished by

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel backache or bladder troubles you--Salts is fine for Kidneys

Meat forms uric acid which settles and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull pain in the back, or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach soars, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush out the body's urinous waste get about a dozen of E. C. Salt from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithic acid and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. E. C. Salt is inexpensive; harmless; and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

Seaweed Beds of White Sea.
Scientists never have been able to estimate the extent of the seaweed beds in the White sea. Why scientists should wish to make this estimate is something for which we cannot answer, but these gentlemen have devoted many precious hours, even days, in the attempt. As the weed is cast up by the storms, it is expected that the industry will be a stable and permanent one. Deep seaweed is the most rich in iodine. Iodine also may be made from Chile salt-peter as a base, but seaweed is the cheapest thing from which it can be manufactured.

Probably the Oldest Book.
In an ancient Samaritan synagogue at Shechem, a double roll of parchment is guarded jealously and is most carefully preserved, says the Christian Herald. It was to Shechem that Abraham came in his first visit to Canaan. Near Shechem Jacob saw his famous well, and the returning Israelites heard here for the last time the voice of Joshua. Shechem was the first residence of the kings of Israel and was a city of refuge. Here at Jacob's well Jesus met the woman of Samaria. Here the great Jewish Martyr was born. After the division of Israel into two kingdoms Shechem became the religious center of the northern kingdom, and Jeroboam's self-appointed faith degenerated into the Samaritan worship of our Lord's day, which is perpetuated in the old synagogue which holds this scroll. This double roll of parchment, possibly the oldest in the world, contains the first five books of the Old Testament and may be as old as the days of Jeremiah.

"HELLO, HELLO," COMING OUT OF THE SKY STARTLES WIRELESS OPERATOR

Wireless operators are generally accused of having a penchant for seeing things and hearing things. They are dealing all the time with the mysterious ether waves which have been harnessed to do service to mankind. Every once in a while we are astonished at the discoveries they make. Even the operators themselves have hair raising experiences. Imagine your surprise, were you sitting at the receiver listening to the dots and dashes of the telegraph code, should you hear a voice plainly calling "Hello, hello, give me RQ2." Then just imagine that you were alone on the fifth story of a building with not another soul around.

All this happened to Ted Leitzinger who has become quite an adept at catching the slippers from all over the country. One evening last week Ted was listening in on the instrument and was startled to hear a voice calling "Hello." He looked around to see who was speaking but saw no one about. Listening intently he heard the voice call "Hello" twice again and ask for RQ2. Then there followed a conversation about maritime matters on the Atlantic coast. Ted was delighted to know that he had succeeded in tuning his instrument to catch the wonderful wireless telephone waves. He rushed to his home and said "Dad, come down to the store." Dad thought there might be something seriously wrong and

STAVE REVENUE FAR IN EXCESS OF PAST YEARS

HARRISBURG, Dec. 5.—Figures compiled at the office of Auditor General Charles A. Snyder show that the income for the last four fiscal years has approximately $190,000,000, and it is estimated that the revenue for the quadrennial period of appropriation years, which will end in June, will be in the neighborhood of $205,000,000. The fiscal year ends with November and the appropriation year with May. The figures for the Snyder term reflect the general state of business. The aggregate of the receipts for the fiscal year ending last Tuesday is twice that of 1917.

$8,000,000 Paid on Autos
The collections for the fiscal year just closed were $62,071,293.95, of which about $21,000,000 was paid by corporations in the form of taxes, penalties and interest; almost $8,000,000 by the automobile division of the State Highway Department; third highest was the transfer inheritance tax on resident estates, which amounted to $7,341,000, and the next highest was the State Insurance Department foreign premium tax with $3,000,000. The Secretary of the Commonwealth paid in more than $2,000,000 as a bonus on charters, a record-breaking sum for such an item of business.

Taking the appropriation years, or from June to June, the revenue for the year ending last May 30 was about $58,807,000, and it is estimated that in the year ending May 30 next it will run more than $62,000,000. March was the best collecting month of the year, showing more than $7,000,000, January being next with $6,373,000.

The fiscal year gained $9,979,524 13 over last fiscal year.

$922,976 from Liquor Licenses
The detail of the receipts shows some interesting things. Liquor licenses, for instance, brought the state $922,976.98, of which $473,470.38 came from retail licenses. In addition brewers' licenses netted the state treasury $191,802.17, while distillers paid licenses of $1,329.72, and $31,355.33 was paid by bottlers.

The capital stock tax aggregated $13,704,000 something unheard of before, while corporations paid on loans $3,542,000 and on gross receipts $3,371,974.88, both very large payments. The inheritance taxes, in addition to the $7,481,000 from resident transfer tax were: Non-resident, $338,676.16; direct $1,079,000; collateral, $1,298,000.

The conscience fund yielded only $39.50 the smallest of any year in

PEACE PROPOSAL OF SINN FEIN PRESENTED TODAY

LONDON, Dec. 7.—Arthur Henderson, bearing a truce flag, was to present the Sinn Fein peace proposal to the British government today. Henderson, British labor leader, is coming back from Ireland where he conferred with Sinn Fein leaders. The government continued to make arrests. Sinn Fein terrorists continued their campaign of ambushing. Last night a lorry load of police nearing Brandon were surprised in the darkness by attackers hidden in the bushes. The police hastened to cover and apparently none were injured. They were rescued by soldiers who heard the gun fire.

ATTEMPT MADE TO "BLOW UP" OFFICE AT BROCKWAYVILLE

At an early hour this morning "veggs" attempted to blow the safe in the Brockwayville postoffice. They succeeded in blowing the outer door of the safe, but were attacked by officers and driver, off before getting into the safe. The men succeeded in making their escape. It is believed that only two men were involved in the job and that they proceeded north.

He Would Wait

The mother told her little son that he could bring home two little boys after kindergarten. She left three apples for them to eat. Instead of bringing home two little boys, her little son brought home six boys. The maid said: "Well, George, I will have to cut the apples in halves now, because we have not enough for each child." Suddenly one of the children, who had eaten his fill of candy, said: "Well, don't give me a half, I am not hungry now, and tomorrow I will come for a whole one."

HARDING DISCUSSES POLICIES WITH CONGRESS LEADERS

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The proposed policies of the Harding Administration were discussed today at conferences held at the Capitol between President-elect Harding and Congressional leaders. Harding was so much engaged that he had to forego a game of golf he intended to play with some friends before leaving at 4:10 p. m. for his home in Marion. Inasmuch as he will not return to Washington until he comes to assume the Presidency Harding wishes to see as many leaders of Congress today as possible. Harding does not intend to come back here this winter.

Because of the persons who wish to see Harding and whom he does not wish to see he has fitted up a secluded office where he invited those with whom he wishes to confer. Harding's conferences began yesterday following his appearance in the Senate.

Small Hoops in Skirts of 1908

A more sensible, if not tasteful innovation of fashion is the wearing of short dresses and very small hoops. Concerning the latter, there is a comical state of consternation among women. Only one possessed of adroitness and skill can manage to sit down in them in an opera seat, a pew, a car; they utterly refuse to subside. The trouble is that the lower hoops are disproportionately large for the upper ones. But the short dress hoops are short and pliable. The dress is of proper length for walking, and when in modest colors is very appropriate for that purpose. Just now these dresses are made as gay as possible, so that the wearers, in their gay petticoats, look like vivandieres. Sometimes the sleeves are characterized by bright blue, and the waist and overskirt are brown—an unbecoming and conspicuous combination.—Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier, December 5, 1908.

WEEKS, HAYS AND DOUGHERTY SURE OF CABINET POSTS

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 6.—At least three cabinet appointments are regarded certain as the result of the conference over which the president presided here today. They are those of John W. Weeks, as Secretary of the navy; Harry M. Dougherty, as attorney general and Will H. Hays as postmaster general. Furthermore it was agreed that all cabinet officers shall be named early in February so that they can serve an apprenticeship in various departments over which they will preside after March 4. (All the cabinet possibilities have approved the plan according to inside reports. Former Senator Weeks, according to earlier reports had indicated as being reluctant to accept any cabinet job except that of secretary of the treasury. That opposition has now been overcome. The treasury portfolio it was learned, will go to Frank

O. Lowden, of Illinois, if he wants it. Otherwise William Boyce Thompson, of New York, will be selected. The final decision as to who shall be secretary of state, depends entirely upon the state of health of Senator Philander Knox, of Pennsylvania. If his strength permits he will probably assume those duties. A second choice is Dr. David Jayne Hill, of New York.

Foolish Believers in Luck. Shallow men believe in luck, believe in circumstances. It was somebody's name, or he happened to be there at the time, or it was so then, and another day it would have been otherwise. Strong men believe in cause and effect. The man was born to do it, and his father was born to be the father of him and of this deed, and by looking narrowly, you shall see there was no luck in the matter, but it was all a problem in arithmetic, or an experiment in chemistry.—Emerson.

SOY BEANS AND SUN FLOWERS GOOD FEED FOR CATTLE

Mixtures of soy beans and corn, and sunflowers and corn for silage have been tried with success at the Pennsylvania State College school of agriculture, and experiments with both will be carried further during the coming winter. Last year very satisfactory results were obtained through feeding these combinations, so much in fact, that the experiment at silos, at the college dairy barns have been filled with a supply that will last through another substantial feed period.

One silo has been filled with soy beans. Much interest has been manifested throughout Pennsylvania in the feeding value of this combination. Soy beans as hay have been steadily increasing in favor in certain sections of the state in the past few years, and there is general interest shown in its possibilities as an ensilage crop combined with corn. It makes a palatable and nutritious feed and the only drawback thus far is the difficulty met by many farmers in planting and fertilizing both crops at the same time.

Experiments with the sunflower and corn silage, composed of equal parts of each plant, are being conducted by the college for the special benefit of the northern tier farmers where the seasons are short and it is difficult to ripen corn. It is claimed that the sunflowers will grow more tons per acre, will thrive on poorer ground and will stand frost better than corn. It is expected that a considerable amount of valuable information will be gained concerning the feeding value of sunflowers and corn grown together for silage.

Word was received Sunday evening from Asheville, N. C., of the death of J. M. Hemmes. The body will arrive Tuesday evening attended by his wife and her sister Miss Verna Bantner.

NEAR 4000 KILLED BY AUTOMOBILES IN U. S. IN 1919

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—A total of 3,808 persons were killed in automobile accidents, or died as a result of injuries therefrom, during the last year, the Census Bureau announced today in a statement offering suggestions for traffic improvement. An automobile accident death rate of 14.1 out of every 100,000 of population was reported for 1919. An increase over every year since 1915 when the rate was 8.0 and an increase of 245 in the total number of deaths over 1918.

"Each year it becomes more and more dangerous for a person to walk the streets," the Census Bureau's statement said. "The reason usually given, and probably the correct one, is that the number of automobiles in use is constantly increasing. The obvious remedy is to improve constantly the traffic regulations to keep pace with the ever-increasing number of automobiles."

Call Not Fanciful One. "This call for better and better traffic regulations is not a fanciful one. Everyone is familiar with the necessity for slow and orderly progress when a crowd emerges from a circus tent and, similarly, automobile traffic must be slowed down and controlled until it becomes safe. The 1919 rates for areas City, Mo., San Antonio and Cleveland, much lower than for 1918, furnish a ray of hope that we are finally waking up."

Suggestions made by the bureau for traffic improvement follow: Election at street crossings of curb safety islands, which, at the most dangerous spots, should be very close together.

Construction of additional crossings in the middle of blocks, where automobiles can approach from only two directions.

Tighten Drivers' Requirements. Demonstration of great skill in driving each machine before granting a driver's license for that machine.

Reduction of the speed limit, especially at crossings.

Fine, revocation of license and imprisonment, each to have its place as an actual penalty.

Youngstown, O., heads the list of 66 cities in the automobile death rate with 28.5 per 100,000 but showed a decrease from the previous year when the rate was 31.9. Richmond, Va., had the lowest rate with 5.9, but showed a slight increase over 1918, when it was 5.4.

New York had the largest total of deaths with 780, an increase of 89 over the previous year and more than double the number in 1918. New York's automobile death rate was 14.0 per 100,000 persons.

Chicago's total deaths number 328, an increase of 37, with a death rate of 12.3.
